GOPAPERLESS

A WHITE PAPER

WHAT CHALLENGES DO HR TEAMS FACE?

Productivity and performance, as well as simplification of work are one of the main fast-emerging HR challenges, respectively 68% and 28%.

HR departments continue to streamline their processes and procedures (41.2%), often in conjunction with a move to automated HR functions, the third most effective strategy (37.9% of respondents).

Improving the employee user experience (31%) tops the list of expected benefits of new HR technology, followed closely by reducing HR administration costs (30%).

Employees are 5x more likely to be engaged when they feel HR systems and platforms are easy to use, and 6x more likely to be engaged when they see systems as effective.

Integrating new HR tools into current workplace technology is a key priority in 2019 for 89% of HR professionals.

WHAT CAN HELP SOLVE CHALLENGES IN HR?

Paperwork takes up a lot of HR professionals' time because of long on-boarding processes and other administrative tasks. It's not only ineffective for high-profile professionals to spend this much time on tasks that could be automated but way too long processes also frustrate candidates, as well as employees when talking about other employment documents like leave approvals, claims, timesheets, etc. 23% of HR professionals say their existing processes for managing suppliers and recruitment are having a negative impact on their ability to be effective.

Surveys also show that using technology to improve HR processes, collaboration and productivity have the most room for improvement-although they are important, they are usually not well-executed.

Although administrative work for HR professionals is inevitable, it's possible to optimise some tasks and appoint saved time for HR strategies or meetings with employees rather than wasting time on filling in piles of papers. Electronic document signing, therefore, can make a difference by significantly shortening time spent on administrative tasks, thus improving employee experience and facilitating HR professional's work.

✓ Employment agreements
